TRUSTING

Set up an obstacle course. Now blindfold one boy and give him directions like: "Take two steps forward, turn left, take three steps forward," etc. Now have the next boy try it.

When you trust someone, you know that they are honest, reliable and you feel safe with them.

A word of caution: Tell children, if someone you trust abuses you – it is important that you tell someone about it. No one has the right to abuse anyone, no matter how trusted they may have been in the past.

THE HIGHEST STANDARD

East High School and West High School were playing for the baseball championship. In the last half of the ninth inning, East High was one run ahead. Two men were out for West High, and East High seemed sure to win. Then the batter hit a two-bagger, and the next man walked. The man on second tried to steal third, and the umpire called him out.

"He was safe," yelled the third-base coach, and the West High rooters took up the cry.

The umpire went over to the third baseman and asked, "Did you touch the man with the ball?"

"No, I missed him," was the honest reply.

The game was resumed, and the first ball pitched was slammed out for a three-base hit. West High won the championship because the East High baseman told the truth. The East High captain was angry at the third baseman.

"You let us down," he said. "Not at all," replied the coach, who overheard the remark. "He held us up to the standard of clean sportsmanship."
